第一节(共15小题;每小题2.5分,满分37.5分)

阅读下列短文,从每题所给的A、B、C、D四个选项中选出最佳选项。

Why take a cruise (游轮) vacation?

If you have a place on your life list, chances are a cruise will get you there—provided the destination is along a coastline or inland waterway. Cruising offers a great value, with trips that include your ship accommodations, meals and entertainment—all rolled into one. And best of all, cruising means seeing the world conveniently after unpacking only once.

Cruises also provide a wonderful option for families, with many ships offering things like fun clubs for kids and teens. But you need to notice that while most are free, nursery programs can cost extra.

What are Tips for Finding Cheap Cruises?

If you're a flexible traveler, you'll have a better chance of finding cheap cruises. Take a cruise that doesn't sail over the summer or holidays, when prices are highest. Book an inside cabin (船舱), or take your chances with a "guarantee cabin," ideal for passengers who aren't picky about their stateroom (特等舱) location but really want the lowest price available.

What are Tips to Finding Last – Minute Cruise Deals?

It's particularly helpful if you live near a cruise port and can quickly drive there. That way you'll probably be able to jump on those deals that might pop up just a week or two before the ship is scheduled to sail. Or if you don't have flexibility with either departure dates or boarding locations, don't insist on exact destinations. This will allow you to find a wider range of last –minute deals traveling to locations in their off – seasons (淡季).

21. What is an advantage of a cruise vacation?

- A. It offers accommodation on land trips.
- B. All service options on cruise trips are free.
- C. You don't need to unpack luggage during the trip.
- D. Cruises can reach any destination on your travel list.

22. Which strategy helps travelers find a low cruise price?

- A. Travelling with family members.
- B. Booking during summer holidays.
- C. Choosing an inside or guarantee cabin.
- D. Prioritizing staterooms with ocean views.

23. What can improve travelers' chances of getting last –minute cruise deals?

- A. Choosing specific destinations.
- B. Driving to the distant ports.
- C. Setting the departure dates early.
- D. Being open to destinations.

Released on January 29, 2025, the animation Ne Zha: Demon Child Conquers the Sea (Ne Zha 2) has been a massive hit. By March 28, its box office had gone over 15.3 billion yuan, making it one of the top 5 highest – earning films in history. It is the first Asian film to reach this level. The movie has also broken records such as becoming the biggest earner in the Chinese film industry and the top – earning film in a single market worldwide.

Such a huge milestone is built on the original Ne Zha. Directed by Yang Yu, known as Jiaozi, Ne Zha 2 continues the adventure of the super – powered boy from Chinese mythology (神话), a story that first enchanted the audience in 2019. Set after the events in the first film, it follows Nezha and Aobing as their souls are saved but their bodies face disappearance. To reconstruct their bodies, the two heroes must rise to the challenges.

Ne Zha 2's success lies not only in money and engaging plots rooted in a novel take on traditional Chinese culture. Apart from the around 2,000 special effects shots contributed by 138 animation studios, it also comes from the ability to connect with people's feelings. The sequel (续集) explores defence in the face of power, the struggle against destiny, and the embrace of self – confidence, taking viewers of all ages on an emotional journey that combines action, humor, and heartfelt moments.

Beyond its domestic box office figures, Ne Zha 2 is ready to make waves internationally and act as a window into China's rich myths and traditions. In cities like New York and Los Angeles, theaters are adding late-night showings to satisfy the high demand.

This outstanding animated feature, a shining example of what is possible when tradition meets innovation, is a big step for Chinese culture going globally. It shows how creative and skilled Chinese filmmakers are and helps the world understand and appreciate Chinese culture better.

24. Why does the author mention the statistics on box office?

- A. To unfold Ne Zha 2's plot to readers.
- B. To present the achievements of Ne Zha 2.
- C. To show the difficulty of film-making.
- D. To compare Ne Zha 2 with overseas films.

25. What does the underlined word "enchanted" in paragraph 2 mean?

- A. Attracted.
- B. Helped.
- C. Disappointed.
- D. Confused.

26. What is paragraph 3 mainly about?

- A. Reasons behind Ne Zha 2's popularity.
- B. Power of ancient Chinese folk tales.
- C. Joint efforts by animation factories.
- D. Emotional response from cinema-goers.

27. What does the author imply in the last two paragraphs?

- A. Jiaozi had predicted Ne Zha 2's success before.
- B. It was too late for US audience to view Ne Zha 2.
- C. Ne Zha 2 serves as a bridge to Chinese culture.
- D. More Chinese films will shine internationally.

C

Growing up in India, economist Abhijit Banerjee was always fascinated by the impressive mental math skills of young workers in local fruit and vegetable markets. "I could see kids in the markets doing complex calculations," he said. "They could quickly calculate change (零钱) after selling multiple items." Yet, Banerjee discovered that the same children struggled in formal written math tests, revealing an imbalance in maths education, especially for talented children from low-income families.

Maths education is becoming ever more important worldwide. As societies grow more data-driven, students need skills beyond traditional textbook maths, such as data interpretation and coding basics. A sound grasp of principles of mathematical reasoning is also necessary for other professions and life skills.

In a study published last week, Banerjee's research group compared the maths abilities of two groups of under-18 students in India. Both attended school, but one group also worked in markets. The researchers found that the working group was more skilled in mental arithmetic than the other one. Yet, those who worked performed poorly in standard written tests, such as long division.

The results show the power of learning-by-doing and its limitations. These children need help with mathematical reasoning to enhance their mental calculation skills. Moreover, if a student is already struggling with basic math concepts like algebra (代数), learning advanced skills like statistics or coding may not lead to desired outcomes.

Most standard assessment (评估) systems worldwide focus on mastering the method and achieving the correct answer rather than understanding reasoning—how a specific result is achieved. Second, relatively few teachers are skilled at teaching reasoning and describing maths through storytelling, and of those, even fewer teach students from low-income families.

These problems must be addressed through big-picture thinking, research-based assessments, and action from policymakers. Banerjee's work highlights undiscovered talent. With proper

- guidance, these children could become researchers, entrepreneurs, or the math teachers that their countries urgently need, thus to help future generations reach their full potential.
28. What impressed Banerjee about the children working in markets?
- A. Their ability to count the items they sell.
 - B. Their skill in mental calculation.
 - C. Their talent to sell fruits and vegetables quickly.
 - D. Their performance in maths tests.
29. What did Banerjee's study reveal about the working group of students?
- A. They struggled in written tests.
 - B. They had no interest in learning maths.
 - C. They lacked basic math concepts entirely.
 - D. They performed equally well in all math tasks.
30. Why do most assessment systems fail to promote mathematical reasoning?
- A. They prefer storytelling.
 - B. They prioritize correct answers.
 - C. They ignore the mastery of the method.
 - D. They are designed for high-income families.
31. What can help children from low-income families improve their math ability?
- A. Teach them advanced courses like statistics and coding.
 - B. Guide them to do more standardized testing.
 - C. Encourage them to gain more market calculation skills.
 - D. Offer them more reasoning-based teaching.

D

Mike Tyson is one of the greatest boxers of all time. Coming from a difficult childhood surrounded by crime and poor family, he escaped his circumstances through a sharp focus on his dream of athletic greatness. Though Tyson achieved all his ambitions of wealth and fame, a happy life seemed to avoid him; he was troubled by crises, failed relationships, and legal issues.

That is what we might call the Tyson Paradox (悖论). Building a good life requires us to have goals that keep us focused. But actually attaining those goals might not give us the satisfaction we imagined. The problem behind the Paradox is called the "arrival fallacy": the assumption that once we hit a goal, the happiness we get will last. This is impossible because we move back to our emotional balance quickly (known as homeostasis) to be ready to process new circumstances.

The solution to defeating the Paradox is to set the right type of goals. A research was published in the Journal of Applied Psychology. Scholars collected data on individuals who were asked whether their professional goals were external (involving material rewards) or internal (existing in mind). The people who concentrated on internal goals were significantly more satisfied with their jobs.

This finding is consistent (一致的) with another research showing that relationship goals bring greater well-being than achievement goals. People who have an ambition to develop deeper friendships, a better marriage, and closer connections with their children and their parents tend to be happier than people working for worldly rewards.

Even within achievement goals themselves, we can see a stronger pattern. Psychologists showed in 2017 that there are two kinds of achievement: mastery (sharpening skills) and performance (obtaining objective rewards). Performance goals brought happiness only when interviewees were compared favorably with others. If such favorable comparisons are not available, the goals will make you unhappy. In contrast, mastery goals can raise your satisfaction regardless of comparison with others.

Having goals in life is healthy because a journey requires a destination to provide direction. But the journey, not the destination, is what gives us the satisfaction we truly need.

32. What does Tyson's story reveal(揭示)?
- A. Sometimes one has to give up happiness to accomplish goals.
 - B. Strong performance does not guarantee happiness.
 - C. Sharp focus on self-improvement leads to great achievement.
 - D. A troubled personal life will not affect one's success.
33. Which of the following statements best describes "arrival fallacy"?
- A. It introduces ways of adapting to new environments.
 - B. It tells how to keep the satisfaction gained from success.
 - C. It is a theory that achievement usually leads to unhappiness.
 - D. It is a mistaken belief that reaching a goal brings lasting joy.
34. Which goal is least likely to defeat the Tyson Paradox?
- A. Pursuing money and fame.
 - B. Building closer friendships.
 - C. Improving professional skills.
 - D. Enjoying the joy from the work.
35. Which of the following proverbs reflects the author's attitude best?
- A. Money makes the world go round.
 - B. Passion for work is the key to success.
 - C. The longest journey begins with the first step.
 - D. True gifts in lessons always lie in the learning process.

第二节(共5小题;每小题2.5分,满分12.5分)

阅读下面短文,从短文后的选项中选出可以填入空白处的最佳选项,选项中有两项为多余选项。

Funny praises to Brighten Someone's Day

Giving praises can be more than just saying "You're great." A well-crafted funny remark can spark joy while showing genuine care. 36 — here's how to master this art creatively!

For friends, highlight your shared experiences. For example, "You're the only person I'd never want to argue with" works perfectly. Adding inside jokes like "Remember when you ate three burgers? That's the confidence I admire!" also strengthens your bond.

For children, combine imagination with easy-to-understand humor. Imagine telling a child, "I bet puppies show pictures of you to their friends!" This playful comparison uses fantasy to make them feel special. 37.

When addressing coworkers, balance humor with professionalism. 38. A comment like "Work feels 10% less chaotic (混乱) when you're around" acknowledges their contribution and lightens their mood without crossing boundaries.

39 Focus on their style or actions, like "If you were a superhero, your power would be shining bright." or "Your scarf looks like it was designed by a fairy!" Such remarks feel safe yet uplifting for the people you met for the first time. Avoid overly personal remarks to keep it comfortable. Never mention sensitive topics like age or weight.

40 Instead of unclear praise like "You're pretty," say "Your determination inspires me." Authenticity (真实) matters more than wit — people sense when your words come from the heart.

- A. In offices, keep jokes respectful and work-related.
- B. Sincerity forms the foundation of any effective praise.
- C. What people look like should always be the primary focus.
- D. The key lies in appropriate humor to different relationships.
- E. With strangers, prioritize light-hearted and non-invasive topics.
- F. Avoid complex expressions to ensure they grasp your warmth easily.
- G. It's always improper to praise people in the form of making fun of them.

A Memorable Summer Sports Day

Last Friday, an exciting Summer Sports Meeting was held in our school. _____

The sports meeting will remain a shining memory in my heart.

第二节(满分25分)

阅读下面材料,根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写两段,使之构成一篇完整的短文。

John and his father shared a love of fishing. At a sunny afternoon, they set sail on calm waters, accompanied by seabirds’ songs and gentle waves that patted their boat. As they sailed farther out, the sky quickly turned dark and the wind grew loud. Soon, a strong storm hit. Huge waves kept hitting their boat. John held on tight as his father struggled to keep the boat’s balance, but the storm wouldn’t stop. For three tiring hours, they fought against the rough sea, growing more tired and scared.

“Don’t give up!” said Father firmly. His face was wet with rain, but his eyes were determined. “When I was young, I rescued a baby blue whale that was trapped in a fishing net. I remember it had several white spots (斑点) on the back. It was scared and was injured, just like what we are now. But by our efforts together, the net was torn up and the baby whale made it to the deep sea. Therefore, my child, do not be afraid of the wind and waves.”

Gradually, the storm began to calm. John and his father breathed a sigh of relief.

But as they looked around, their relief turned to fear. The coastline disappeared from their sights. At that time, John’s father checked the compass, but it was no use. The sun was beginning to set, and the fading light only added to their helplessness.

As hours passed, the silence between them grew heavier. John stared at the horizon, hoping to find a sign of land or another boat, but there was nothing. The vastness of the sea seemed endless. Even John’s father seemed to lose confidence.

Suddenly, John noticed something in the distance. He pointed it out to his father, who immediately turned the boat toward it. As they got closer, they realized it was a blue whale, whose white spots shone lightly under the the setting sun.

注意:

- 1. 续写词数为150左右;
- 2. 请按如下格式作答。

John and his father saw the huge creature was swimming slowly toward them too. _____

They finally reached the beach, tired but thankful. _____
